Unless we have sailors we can never have an efficient navy. Until we have a commercial marine we can't have sailors. AFTER the stream of Columbian oratory has flowed until the country is sufficiently fructified the Eaton-Morrill tariff-commission bill will pass the House by a large majority. Some good speeches have been made, but the student of political economy will look in vain through the entire debate for a single new idea.

ONE of the Washington correspondents recalls with lachrymose regrets "the incomparable Forty-sixth Congress." It is probable that the like of that Congress ing out their own destinies." Of course will never again be seen. How unfortunate that we have not some great master to paint, for a place in the Capitol rotunda, a picture of that Democratic House as it sat, perspiring in impotent rage, listening to one of "Mister" Hayes' veto Conscience and Its Uses.

The most delicate organ in human nature is the conscience. It is popularly supposed to be emblematic of the divine spirit in a man, the still, small voice which curbs passions and spurs good intentions to action. In the bosom of a noble person it is the prompter which rules; in the ignoble it is the scape-goat the race which had been emancipated man shrinks from a worthy act the performance of which involves self-sacrifice conscience pricks him on and he buries self out of sight. If a selfish man can make something by doing wrong, but fears censure of the act, he parades his conscience in the public view, and swears that but for that inexorable monitor he would do what everybody says he ought to do. There is no depth of meanness beyond that which defends its evil deed by claiming it to have been breed on a conscientious conviction. Beware of the man who serves the devil in obedience to his conscience.

Sometimes a cause is to be betrayed, and a single man can do it. A vote in Congress or a State Legislature may put civilization back twenty years. Then among the lazy, and therefore over educomes an opportunity for masquerading behind a sham conscience. Judas Iscariot thought it wasteful extravagance for the Saviour's head to be bathed with costly ointment, which might be sold and the proceeds given to the poor. How tender the conscience which could devise such an objection to the devout act of a repentant. This was the same Judas who afterward betraved his Master to be killed. Too late his conscience upbraided him for that. "Look thou to that," sternly responded the power he had served, when he made moan over having shed the innocent blood."

If in any State in the South any Re publican with a deciding vote should ever so honestly differ with all who were opposed to the Bourbon past and should ever so honestly agree with all who were opposed to equal rights and the maintenance of law, he ought to probe well his own conscience before voting with all the Bourbons against all their opponents. Vain would be his regrets if, when it was too late, be should be execrated for having betrayed the cause of justice, nationality, and peace to the men who make political evil their good.

An apportionment bill in the Legislature of Virginia was defeated on the final vote in the senate on Friday last. Nineteen senators favor a reapportionment which will undo the gross political inequalities of the present one. One Republican Readjuster senator-Mr. Williams, of Nottaway-for reasons doubtless satisfactory to himself, refused his vote for the measure which all of both parties, but himself, declared would give the national cause eight of the ten Congressmen to which Virginia is entitled. It is for the great Searcher of hearts only to divine the motives of man, and far be it from us to invade that sacred jurisdiction. We may only regret that on the occasion referred to Mr. Williams's conscience compelled him to differ with all Republicans in and out of Virginia who knew the merits of the measure. hope that upon full consultation with his party friends he may be able to agree with them upon such modifications to the defeated bill as will make it acceptable to a majority.

Looking a Gift-Horse in the Month The splendid gift of John T. Slater, of $1,000,000 for the education of Southern blacks, has had an unpleasant effect upon the editor of the Nashville (Tenn.) Only itself can be the parallel of the editorial which we copy entire from the American of the 14th instant. We ask for it a careful reading. It is headed Suit for Malpractice.

Yesterday in the Circuit Court the case of Will-iam Joice against E. P. Howland and Samuel T. Mason was on trial. This case arises out of an operation performed by the defendants in extractoperation performed by the defendants in extracting teeth from the plaintiff's jaw last April, and for which he claims $2,000 damages. It will doubtless be remembered by the resders of The Repustican that the publication of the alleged malpractics was the cause of the libel and against the proprietors of the Sanday Res, which resulted in a verdict of guilty and a fine of $0. Messrs. Linton and Darlington appear for the plaintiff and Mesers, Moulton and Cole for the defendants.

The Three-Card Monte Case The Three-Card Monte Case.
Yesterday in the Criminal Court Mr. W. A. Gook made a motion to quash the indictments against L. L. Boone, W. F. Norman, and John H. Murphy, the three-card monte men, for the reason that no order was made by the justice holding the Ducember Criminal Term, at which the indictments were found, for witnesses to be sworn in the came: that it did not appear that the witnesses were sworn in open court and the witnesses were not directed by the justice to be sworn. The motion will be argued to-morrow.
